Accused Captain Gains Point at Court-martial Trial.

CONDUCTS HIS OWN DEFENSE

Examines Witnesses in a Masterly don't care about that,' and ordered me to Case-Arouses More Interest in Judges than He Has Heretofore.

New York, Dec. 14.-Capt. Arthur W. Capt. Whitney said that he believed building, made a decidedly good impression to-day by his conduct of his own de-conduct toward him of his commanding officer, Lieut. Col. Clarence Deems, commanding the artillery district of Baltimore. The post is at Fort Howard.

Three witnesses were examined to-day and with two of them Capt. Chase came off very well. In fact, there was a perceptible stir after the captain finished with Lieut, Hugh S. Brown, adjutant of the post. The members of the courtmartial asked the adjutant a lot of questions and the answers elicited all tended to help out the case of the officer ac-

Col. Deems said that he considered to be impudent. He denied that he ever had ordered the captain from his

"Has an officer ever before been ordered by you to remain within post limits at Fort Howard before charges were brought against him?" asked Capt.

"I don't recall any cases," replied Col. Deems, "where an officer, having failed to obey an order, has not at once made an explanation." Later on in the crossexamination Capt. Chase asked:

The direct examination of Lieut. Brown by Judge Advocate Johnston produced a line of testimony in general support of the commanding officer. It appeared that Lieut. Brown heard all the conversations between Col. Deems and Capt. Chase, and that everything between them apparently was friendly up to November 5.

cross-examination Capt. Chase brought out that Lieut. Brown was sup-posed to have blanks for small arms practice reports in his possession, and to be nursed by its mother, thinking, no doubt, that it was to be the last nursing that he had none until they arrived from the pup would ever get.

the post until the proper reports were filed, the letter actually read that he should not leave "until further orders." It was brought out that when Capt. Chase had filed his first reports of practice, and they had been returned to be made out over again, that the first sergeant, and not the captain, had receipted over to Lieut. Cardwell, who had misundenstood the indorsement, and had delayed making them out again.

Lieut. Brown testified that Capt. Chase had received orders to stay with the battery on drill throughout the fourth and fifth of November, and not to stop for matters of lunch or dinner until the prac tice of the battery was finished. That was taken to show that he would hardly have had time to complete the orders about filing new small arms practice reports, even if he had the proper blanks.

Sought Confidential Chat. Lieut. Brown then said that he had asked Capt. Chase to come and see him for a confidential chat about the trouble and had assured him that the lieutenant colonel would be willing to meet him more than half way if he would apologize. Lieut. Brown said he told the captain that the move was of his idea, and Deems attempting to explain about the blanks when the latter interrupted him and told him to go and obey the order at once. It was made clear that what Capt. Chase contended, namely, that he had no chance to finish his explanation, was true.

October 14, when Capt. Chase ordered Capt. Raymond to cease fire drill and the latter paid no attention.

Capt. Chase's questions and those of members of the court brought out that Capt. Raymond had been direspectful to Capt. Chase, which was a point the captain had made in reply to a complaint made about him by Capt. Raymond. Capt. Raymond's action, apparently, was based on the issuance of an order that the mine command he had was separate the regular fire command, and Lieut. Brown had to admit that, although that order had been in force for at least two weeks, Capt. Chase, the battery con mander, had not been told of it. That ## scored another point for the accused.

Court Shows Interest. There was a rapid-fire of questions from the members of the court, all except one of the twelve asking Lieut. Brown something about the case. It was the most hearty interest displayed up to that point. Special stress was laid on the fact that Lieut. Brown had not told his commanding officer that Capt. Chase had no chance to get blanks for his reports, and that Capt. Chase did not have chance to see Capt. Reymond's complaint of him. The additional fact that Capt. Chase was by order busy with the battery practice for two days when he was supposed to be getting out these reports was leveloped in several ways by the members of the court. Capt. Chase was feeling much better about his case when Lieut. Brown left the stand. Capt. Henry H. Whitney, artillery engineer for the district of Baltimore, was called. He testified about the time, which it was his place to look *ar a matter that was taken up on the
